Radburn layout: In town planning and urban studies, a planned urban layout, developed by Clarence Stein, applied in Radburn, New Jersey, USA in 1928, which separates pedestrians from cars and trucks by arranging “superblocks” or housing, shops, offices, schools, etc., around a central green. Each superblock has its out roads, off which come service cul-de-sacs. The central green or pedestrian space has pedestrian access only, either by underground passages or surface walks.

Radburn layout: A style of residential layout pioneered at Radburn, New Jersey (USA) between 1928 and 1933 and later widely adopted in the planning of postwar housing areas in Britain, particularly in new towns and expanded towns. Its main features include the separation of pedestrian and car traffic, housing facing onto open space and gardens and with car access to the rear, loop roads, and cul-de-sacs. In the British postwar new towns, the Radburn principles were clearly evident in the detailed plans of neighbourhood units.

Adapted from John Small and Michael Witherick, A Modern Dictionary of Geography. @1995 by E Arnold.

Social Influence

Of the many influences on human behavior, social influences are the most pervasive. The main influence on people is people. When we hear the term social influence, most of us think of deliberate attempts of someone to persuade to alter our actions or change our opinions. The Television commercial comes to mind. But many of the most important forms of social influence are unintentional, and some of the effects we humans have on one another occur by virtue of the simple fact that we are in each other’s physical presence.

In 1898 a psychologist named Triplett made an interesting observation. In looking over speed records of bicycle racer, he noticed that better speed records were obtained when cyclists raced against each other than when they raced against the clock. This observation led Triplett to perform the first controlled laboratory experiment ever conducted in social psychology. He instructed children to turn a wheel as fast as possible for a certain period of time. Sometimes two children worked at the same in the same room, each with his own wheel; at other times, they worked alone. The results confirmed his theory: Children worked faster in coaction, that when another child doing the same thing was present, than when they worked alone.

Soon after Triplett’s experiment on coaction, it was discovered that the mere presence of a passive spectator (an audience rather than a coactor) was sufficient to facilitate performance. This was discovered accidentally in an experiment on muscular effort and fatigue by Meumann (1904), who found that subjects lifted a weight faster and farther whenever the psychologist was in the room. Later experiments have confirmed this audience effect.

It appears that coaction and audience effects in humans are caused by the individual’s “cognitive” concerns about competition and the evaluation of performance that others will make. We learn as we grow up that others praise or criticise, reward or punish our performances, and this raises our drive level when we perform before others. Thus, even the early studies of coaction found that if all elements of competition are removed, coaction effects are reduced or eliminated. Similarly, audience effects are a function of the subject’s interpretation of how much he is being evaluated.
1. Which of the following would be an example of the coaction effect?
   A. A woman works harder when her boss is in the room than when she is alone.
   B. Bob’s two children finish their homework faster when he is watching them than when he is not.
   C. Players on the team work harder when they exercise together than they each exercise alone.
   D. Joe and his two friends work more slowly when they are together than when each is alone.

2. What is the main idea of the last paragraph?
   A. How people grow up determines their adult behavior.
   B. Competition and evaluation increase the coaction and audience effects.
   C. People praise and criticize children as they grow up.
   D. Competition and evaluation are not related to the coaction and audience effects.

3. According to the passage, Triplett’s experiment of 1898
   A. supported his theory of coaction effect.
   B. challenged his theory of coaction effect.
   C. showed that adult cyclists race harder against each other than against the clock.
   D. showed the connection between coaction effect and audience effect.

4. As it is used in the passage, what does the highlighted phrase “comes to mind” mean?
